Step 4 : Report

Difficulties encountered

I downloaded the ten most recent Senate Committee on Foreign Relations hearings available through the refined GovInfo search, including subcommittee hearings, using both a website CSV export and API search results. Both methods successfully downloaded ten PDFs and returned the same ten hearings in the same order.

The initial phrase search also returned a hearing issued by the Senate Committee on Commerce, Science, and Transportation because it mentioned Foreign Relations. I addressed this by restricting the search to the Senate chamber and the Foreign Relations committee. I also encountered an R error when combining API results because some fields contained nested lists of unequal lengths. Extracting simple fields before combining the records resolved this problem. Another error occurred when combining download logs before the CSV log object had been created; creating the missing log resolved it.

a. Usability of the documents as data

The PDFs provide source documents for analysis, but downloading them does not automatically produce an analysis-ready dataset. Their text must first be extracted and checked for completeness. Any scanned pages without usable embedded text would require optical character recognition (OCR). Headers, footers, page numbers, and formatting may also require cleaning, while tables and images may need separate processing.

To create a document-level table, I would use one row per hearing and include its package ID, title, date, committee, and document link. To create a text corpus, I would extract each hearing's text, associate it with its package ID, and check the extraction against the original PDF. Analysis of individual statements would require additional work to identify speakers and separate their testimony.

b. Improvements to the process

I would use committee and chamber metadata filters from the beginning rather than relying only on a phrase search. I would also examine the available HTML or text versions before extracting text from PDFs, since these formats may simplify text processing. The PDFs would remain useful for checking the original layout, tables, and images.

Metadata can supply identifiers, titles, dates, committee information, and available download links without manually opening each hearing. I would preserve this metadata alongside the download log, record the query and sorting settings, and add retries for failed requests. If collecting more documents, I would use pagination to retrieve additional results.

c. What the API added

The API provided structured search results and document metadata that R could retrieve directly, reducing the manual exporting and page parsing required by website searches and scraping. It also supported repeatable requests with specified queries, sorting, and pagination, making the collection process easier to document and rerun.
